

At NTH, we do everything we can to keep fees for our workshops as low as possible to make them available for everyone from students to seasoned practitioners to join us. We also work in Listening Partnerships, so we do everything we can to insure that we have even numbers by the time we gather. Our financial policies reflect both of these concerns.

For all of our programs, we ask for a non-refundable deposit to hold your place.

For the rare cancellation, we will be able to refund all your money (except the deposit) until six months before the retreat and half your money until three months before the gathering date. We will not be able to make a refund in the final three months, unless we are able to fill your spot from the waiting list. Because our programs involve an extensive time commitment, it is difficult for people to join with little notice.

Deposits and other payments cannot be transferred to workshops with another of NTH's facilitators, but can sometimes be applied to another workshop offered by the same facilitators, depending on the timing of your request and the availability of a spot in the desired training.

We will always be open to discussing your circumstances with you, and doing what we can.
